

Dr Darlington Tshuma, is a Post-Doctoral Fellow with the Thabo Mbeki African School of Public and International Affairs (TM School) at the University of South Africa. He is policy analyst, researcher, and peace practitioner with extensive experience working with non-profit organizations, Universities and think tanks in Africa and Europe. His research work centres around various aspects of governance in Africa including colonial encounters, human rights, democracy, gender, human security, African development, African nationalism, Leadership, and contemporary African politics. He has published widely in leading prestigious national, regional, and international journals and periodicals. Some of the notable publications where his work can be found include Conflict Trends (published by ACCORD), the South African Journal of International Affairs (SAJIA), the International Review of the Red Cross and the Horn of Africa Bulletin (HAB). His work has contributed to the discourse on governance and politics in Africa and presented academic papers at conferences and events in several countries, including Italy, Germany, South Africa, Kenya, Ethiopia, Sudan, and Zimbabwe. He is inaugural Africa Policy Fellow of the School of Transnational Governance (STG) at the European University Institute (EUI) in Florence, Italy and an affiliate of the Refugee Law Initiative (RLI) at the School of Advanced Study, University of London.